Sony e Villa

The Gist: Top-shelf Net Appliance

Sony's $500 e Villa is the Cadillac of countertop computers. Like 3Com's Audrey, the shiny, metallic info-appliance provides an appealingly simple, instant-on interface for surfing, emailing, and other Netly basics. It also works as an Internet radio, and its flat, 15-inch portrait-mode screen is clearly best-in-class. Connecting via phone line or Ethernet connector and running on BeIA, e Villa is great for the PC-shy, or as a second machine for households that log in long hours.

Artloop

The Gist: One-stop Shop For Exhibitionism

Becoming an art connoisseur online once required trolling museum, gallery, and auction sites, but Artloop collects all the knowledge you need in one place. The data-rich resource not only displays art, but also offers mini-biographies of artists and extensively cross-referenced histories of entire movements. The site doesn't stress etail, but it does let you track valuations. While its staffers establish a reputation as consultants to museums and private collectors, Artloop plans to pull in funds from discreetly placed ads.
